Secondary suites get debated at city council
Kelly Turner
3/7/2011

Special permission is currently needed to build secondary suites in our city, but that could all change today, now that city council is tackling the issue. Alderman Diane Colley-Urquhart says there will be thirteen who vote on the issue today, because two aldermen had to be recused. Alderman John Marr wants to put in a nanny suite and Alderman Shane Keating already has one. Colley-Urquhart says it's also important to be careful when listening to polls done on the issue. She says she conducted one last week, and it became obvious it was hijacked. Some city alderman say any changes to the bylaw will create headaches, including parking problems and the possibility of renters being 'thrown out on the streets' but Mayor Nenshi says, most major cities across Canada, have already adopted new bylaws.
