City's auditor finds extra cash from taxpayers

Calgarians may be overtaxed with little to show for it.

While that may not come as much of a surprise to many, it does to the auditor down at city hall.

Tracy McTaggart has been investigating the city's reserves and the amount of cash in them. She found 55 separate reserves with cash totalling $818 million.

She says a number of the reserves, with cash totalling $6.5 million, should be shut down and the money should potentially be released to taxpayers.

Aldermen Ric McIver and Diane Colley-Urquhart are jumping on that bandwagon. McIver tells The Calgary Sun he will ask for that money to be put towards getting serious about snow removal in and around the city.
